

THE NATION'S LOSS.

Vice-President Thomas A. Hendricks Dead.

AN ACCOUNT OF HIS ILLNESS.

Sketch of His Public Life—He Died of Paralysis of the Brain.

Death of Vice-President Hendricks.

INDIANAPOLIS, Indiana, November 25.—Vice-President Hendricks died this afternoon about 5 o'clock. He attended at the reception last evening and complained of feeling unwell this morning. He rapidly grew worse and expired about the hour named.

INDIANAPOLIS, November 25.—Vice-President Hendricks died very suddenly at his residence a few minutes before 5 o'clock this afternoon. He came home from Chicago early in the week and complained of feeling unwell, but nothing serious was thought of it at the time. Last night he and Mrs. Hendricks attended a reception at the residence of John J. Cooper, and after he came home he complained of pains in his side and stomach. This morning he was no better, and his family physician, Dr. Thompson, was called in. He gave him an emetic and later in the day an injection. Hendricks stayed in his room all day, and most of the time in bed, although he sat up at frequent intervals. He required no callers, but about 5 o'clock Mrs. Hendricks left his bedside to see a caller for a few minutes in the parlor. She was delayed longer than she expected, and when she returned to the room she found that Mr. Hendricks was dead. The end of a busy and eventful life had come peacefully and quietly. On his face there was no indication of pain or suffering, and his eyes were only half-closed, as if in a gentle sleep. He died of paralysis of the brain.

INDIANAPOLIS, November 25.—Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, Vice-President of the United States, died very suddenly at his residence in this city, at 4.45 this evening, under circumstances that were particularly distressing to his family and friends, inasmuch as they had not anticipated a fatal termination to his brief illness and nobody was with him when death came. He returned from Chicago last Saturday and since then had been complaining somewhat of pain in his head and breast, but nothing serious was thought of it. Last night he and Mrs. Hendricks attended a reception at the residence of Hon. John J. Cooper, secretary of the State, returning home in their carriage about midnight. Hendricks had taken off the heavy coat he was wearing and was put on a dress suit of lighter material and before he got home, complained of chilliness and a certain degree of exhaustion, but attributed it to malarial influence. He sat by the fire for an hour or more before retiring, but declined to send for a doctor, although about 8 o'clock this morning, when he arose, dressed himself and ate a hearty breakfast, saying he felt much better and intended to attend to considerable business during the day. He and Mrs. Hendricks walked out for nearly half an hour and he had apparently regained his physical vigor and cheerfulness. An hour later however, he began to be troubled with pains in the region of his stomach and Mrs. Hendricks sent for the family physician, Dr. W. C. Thompson, who long and confidential friend of the Vice-President. As the pains in the stomach continued to increase, he was given an emetic and afterwards an injection and relief came in a natural way. He arose from his bed, in which he had lain only a few minutes, and read the morning papers, talking cheerfully with his wife and an old house servant. Just before noon, he had a relapse, however, and the physician was again summoned and administered the usual remedies, besides bleeding the patient, and Mr. Hendricks again expressed himself as being greatly relieved. He remained in his room all the afternoon, occasionally rising from his bed to which he was compelled to return by a recurrence of the abdominal pains. To callers who came, and they were numerous, he sent word that he was indisposed, but would be glad to see them tomorrow. About 4.30, Mrs. Hendricks, who had been at his bedside all day, went to the parlor to see a caller, who had called to consult with her regarding the affairs of the reform story of which she was manager, and she remained with him about twenty minutes. Tom, a colored servant, and Harry Moran, Hendricks' nephew, and page in Washington, remained with him. The servant went out and Mr. Morgan stayed. Mr. Hendricks tossed uneasily on his bed and complained of great pain, but suddenly it seemed to cease, and he said to the nephew, "I am free at last; send for Eliza," (meaning his wife), and these were his last words, for the young man, not realizing the urgency of the message, did not deliver it at once. Just before 5 o'clock, Mrs. Hendricks came into the room and found that her husband was dead. The end of a long and eventful life had come peacefully and quietly. He lay on the bed outside of the covering, only partially draped, with his eyes only half closed, as if he were in gentle sleep. On his face there were no trace of pain or suffering, but a pallor had come over it that indicated only too plainly that he had passed away. It needed no close examination to tell that he was dead, and Mrs. Hendricks screamed and ran down stairs. A servant was dispatched to the residence of Dr. Thompson, adjoining, and he came immediately, but by the time he had reached the bedside the limbs of the distinguished dead man were becoming cold and rigid, and to Mrs. Hendricks' pathetic appeal, "Oh, doctor, can't you do something?" he was allowed to answer, "It is too late."

Mrs. Hendricks became almost distracted with grief, and it was an hour or more before she became sufficient composed to give any information about her husband's last moments. The family servants, two of whom have lived with them for years, ran about the house crying and moaning, and there was the utmost confusion for some time. When the news was bolted down town, it was generally discredited, and in a very few minutes a hundred or more of Mr. Hendricks' close political and personal friends had hurried to the house. Very soon a great crowd collected around the entrance and on the street, and it was found necessary to refuse admission to any and all comers except immediate relatives.

Mr. Hendricks died in his private chamber, a large comfortable room in which he did most of his work. Near his bedside was a case containing legal and political works and on his desk were his papers, memoranda and a large number of letters which had been allowed to accumulate without answering in the last two or three days. His dressing gown and slippers were at his bedside and near by was a tall stand on which were various medicines and a goblet of water. Portraits land-capes and bric-a-brac adorned the walls of the room and were in striking contrast with the sad scene within. Dr. Thompson says that in his opinion Mr. Hendricks died of paralysis of the brain and there will probably be a post mortem examination to establish what the disease was. For several years he had not been a robust man and was subject to frequent "bad spells" as he called them, during which sometimes he would be prostrated for days at a time. About two years ago he was confined to his room for several weeks by a gangrenous affection of a foot which, at times, it was feared, would result in blood-poisoning and it was then thought that the end of his life was near at hand, but he apparently entirely recovered from this and was in his usual health. While in Washington, during the session of Congress, he was overworked and almost worn out by the press of political matters, and upon his return home he signified his intention of laying aside all public business this summer and devoting the time to recreation. He spent three weeks at Atlanta City, fishing, bathing and visiting, and then came west and went to a northern lake resort, and it is towards the Miami R-servoir in Ohio, on a fishing expedition. He returned from there two weeks ago, and at the time he said he never felt better in his life. Last week, by special invitation, he attended a fat stock show at Chicago and was the recipient of considerable attention there, in the way of compliments and receptions, returning home on Saturday somewhat indisposed. At the reception last night, however, he appeared unusually cheerful and remained much later than was his custom on such occasions. News of Mr. Hendricks' death spread rapidly throughout the city, and there was a general expression of sorrow over it. Those who were his political enemies, who were his personal friends, and to everyone who called on him or met him, he had a pleasant word or greeting. There were crowds around the bulletin boards down town all the evening, while in the vicinity of his residence there was another crowd, all anxious to learn particulars of his sudden death. The great papers could not get out extras fast enough to supply the demand. He had been dead but a few minutes, when a force of men began draping the State, county and city buildings in black, and throughout the night signal emblems were placed on nearly all the prominent business houses and residences, so that by morning the city will have put on a general garb of mourning. All the city ministers will, in their Thanksgiving services to-morrow, make appropriate mention of the death of the distinguished statesman and Right Rev. Bishop Knickerbocker, Bishop of the Diocese of Indiana, of the Episcopal Church, of which Hendricks was a lifelong member, will, it is understood, preach a memorial sermon.

Ex-Sens. Joseph E. McDonald who, with Mr. Hendricks, has shared the honors of his party in this State, said to night: "No man in his day occupied a higher or more conspicuous position in his party, or in public life, than did Mr. Hendricks, and very few public men have had their official conduct less criticized than he. I think Mr. Hendricks is fairly entitled to the good name he has wrought out for himself in both public and private circles, and his death leaves a void in political and social circles in Indiana that will not soon or easily be filled. Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks have lived in Indianapolis for nearly thirty years, and have been prominent in all the representative social features of the city's existence. They had but one child, who died when but 3 years old, when they lived in Shelby County. For a long time they had apartments in hotel here, as Mr. Hendricks' official duties kept him in Washington much of the time. Afterwards they had a residence in the northern part of the city, but about five years ago moved down town to an old family residence directly opposite the State House, where they have since lived. They entertained their friends frequently by parties and receptions, and were always at home to those who called. It was this that made Mr. Hendricks so deservedly popular, for he and his wife treated everybody cordially and courteously, and whose whose positions in life were inferior were always sure of a kindly reception at his house. Mr. Hendricks was very charitable, and calls on him for aid were frequent and never needed. For several years he had been actively identified with the Indianapolis Benevolent Society, an organized charity, and had contributed liberally to the cause to which it was devoted, both in money and work. He had been deacon in St. Paul's Episcopal Church for a long time, and connected with various other religious and benevolent associations. Aside from his political duties he devoted much of his time to the practice of his profession, being a member of the law firm of Baker, Hord & Hendricks, and since the death of Ex-Governor Baker, he has been the senior member. His practice was largely in Federal Courts and principally in railroad cases, he having been employed in several cases of national importance. His long experience in legislative and governmental affairs had made him one of the best exponents of constitutional law in the country, and his opinion on questions involving this was solicited from all parts of the country. He often said that the ambition of his early manhood was to be either Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or the author of works on law, or editor of a legal journal. His domestic relations were of the most perfect character, and Mrs. Hendricks, who is a brilliant and accomplished woman, was of great aid to him in his political career, as she had large and varied information, and excellent judgment, besides being greatly ambitious for her husband's political advancement. Since her husband's serious attack two years ago, both of them have been apprehensive of a sudden end of his life and the attachment between them has grown very strong, almost sentimentally so. So intense has this become, in fact he would not consent for his wife to be away from him for any length of time. Only last week, while in Chicago, he accompanied Mrs. Hendricks even on her shopping expeditions. They had frequently talked over his conditions and probabilities, of his early death, and it is evident that for several months past there has been a crowding fear of this kind in his mind. His method of living was simple and unpretentious. His house is an old-fashioned structure, large and built so as to give the most room. It was furnished richly, but in excellent taste, and had a cheerful, home-like appearance. When not engaged with callers, Mr. Hendricks devoted much of his time to his books, and his literary attainments were varied and general.

BUT ONE MAN'S LIFE BETWEEN.

WASHINGTON, November 25.—The announcement of the death of Vice-President Hendricks has cast a deep gloom over the Capital. Hendricks' health had improved so much during the last week, that he was looked to for his continuance in public life for many more years, and the news of his sudden death caused a shock. The President and members of the Cabinet were informed at once, and the President immediately called a meeting of the Cabinet to take suitable action. Senator Edmunds was apprised of the death of the Vice-President by an Associated Press reporter, and was greatly affected. He said he had known Mr. Hendricks a great many years and they were intimate friends in old times in the Senate, and he added: "I have always had a personal regard for him. I regret exceedingly his death. I shall call a meeting to-morrow of all the Senators in the city to make such arrangements to have the Senate represented at the funeral as are proper."

Secretary Bayard said: "The news of Mr. Hendricks' death is painful to us all, but the condition in which the American people are placed by his death through the failure of Congress to pass proper laws regarding the Presidential succession, the fact that there is now but one man's life between the American people and no President, is more painful to contemplate."

More of Morosini.

New York, November 25.—G. P. Morosini, banker, has secured another attachment against Broker William Heath and his partner Charles E. Quincy, and also against Mrs. Elizabeth R. Heath, from the Supreme Court. The affidavit upon which this indictment was granted is similar to that upon which the previous attachment was granted for $100,000 money on deposit with Heath & Co., and used by that firm in their business at the time of the failure. The attachments against Quincy and Mrs. Heath are granted on the ground of non-residence.

Off for Washington.

SAN FRANCISCO, November 25.—Congressmen Morrow and Felton left for Washington yesterday. Barclay Heyley left to-day. Senator Miller is still too unwell to leave. Congressman Hervey, an interview published in the Examiner, says: "He and Morrow have drafted a new Chinese bill to be submitted to Congress. It is an exclusion bill; under its provision no Chinaman will be allowed to land in the United States after July 1st next."

LIGHTNING FLASHES.

The Servians renewed the attack on Widdin yesterday afternoon without success.

The Powers have instructed Prince Alexander to agree to the armistice. King Milan has ordered his troops to cease hostilities.

John Eaton, commissioner of education, has resigned. He complains of overwork, and will accept the presidency of a college, where the duties are less exacting.

Business houses and private residences in many cases are already covered with emblems of mourning in respect to the memory of Vice-President Hendricks.

An agreement has been drawn up and signed by Scheffer, Viansax and Slosson to enter a tournament to be held in New York City, between December 15th and February 15th, and play to a finish for the championship of the world.

An Editor's Tribute.

Theron P. Kestor, editor of the Wayne, Ind., Gazette, writes: "For the past five years have always used Dr. King's New Discovery for coughs of most severe character, as well as for those of a milder type. It never fails to effect a speedy cure. My friends to whom I have recommended it speak of it in the same high terms. Having been cured by it of every cough I have had for five years, I consider it the only reliable and sure cure for coughs, colds, etc." Call at Z. C. M. I. Drug Store and get a Free Trial Bottle. The Grand Aims of Life.

Are nullities to the chronic invalid. What to him are the rewards of ambition, the accumulation of fortune, or the fruition of domestic happiness? The zest of life is gone, its aims are dead. Well for him if all this is not irretrievable—if his malady is not of the deep, deep organic sort which forbids hope of cure. For many of the ills to which flesh is heir, formerly supposed to be incurable, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a sovereign remedy. Among them are dyspepsia, chronic constipation, rheumatism, debility and nervousness. These are remediable with the grand restorative, which does the work thoroughly, striking at the root of the evils to the removal of which it is adapted. By insuring activity and purity of the circulation, inducing a healthy flow of the bile, and promoting a regular habit of body, it fortifies the system against malaria. It is also useful as a diuretic.
